WHEN the arrangement of an exhibition of representative portraits by the late Robert MacCameron was suggested to me a short time ago, I accepted the proposal with gratification, as I realized it would be a pleasure to display in my Gallery the work of this able and versatile artist. Hardly, however, had the arrangements for the exhibition been completed, when with his many friends and admirers, I was greatly shocked by the news of his sudden death on December 29th last.

The exhibition, therefore, becomes a memorial one, but the art public and his sorrowing friends will perhaps the more welcome the opportunity to see and study this talented painter's work, and will all the more realize what his loss means, not only to America, but also to the world.
